課程簡介

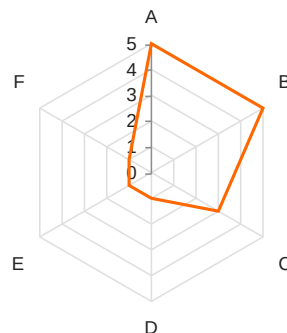

Course Description

For nearly seven centuries, from the rise of Islam in the seventh century to the Mongol invasions of the thirteenth, the Middle East underwent profound political, social, and intellectual transformations. Beginning with the Prophet Muhammad's message and the formation of the first Muslim community in the Arabic Peninsula, this course traces the expansion of Islam across Syria, Egypt, Iraq, Iran, and beyond. It examines the development of the caliphates, the emergence of regional dynasties, and the changing relationships among rulers, military elites, religious scholars, merchants, converts, and diverse Christian, Jewish, and Muslim communities. The course also explores the growth of cities such as Mecca, Medina, Damascus, Baghdad, Cairo, and Jerusalem, as well as major developments in law, theology, literature, science, trade, and material culture. It covers the first two caliphates, the period known as the Crusades, the rise of the Seljuks and other regional powers, and concludes with the Mongol invasions that inaugurated a new political order of the Middle East.
